

CONTEXT®

I establish a stable perception through relating to the past in order to better learn, understand, and develop my perspective for the future.

Academic Life

- Create a historical frame of reference for whatever you study to gain relevancy.
- Seek research opportunities to work with reputable and recognized historians.
- Bring historical examples to any classroom in order to expand the education of your peers and draw discussion to past observations.

Career Goals

- Read as much as you can about career planning so you understand the timeline of the process.
- Look to job shadow archaeologists, humanities professors, or antique appraisers about why they love their work.
- You will flourish in job environments that allow you to explore how things came to be.

Decision Making

- Accept change and practice remaining calm while moving forward.
- Use fact-based comparisons to prior successes to paint of picture of what could be in the future
- Read historical novels and biographies, as you may find insights that can influence your own decisions.

Leadership Tips

- Before planning begins on a project, encourage those involved to study past projects and scrutinize areas of both struggle and success.
- Help your organization strengthen its culture via folklore such as awards and traditions.
- Encourage others to turn to you for a review on what's been done and what's been learned.

Relationship Building

- Seek out mentors who have a sense of history as their stories will likely spark your thought process.
- Partner with someone with strong Futuristic and Strategist talents to bridge the game and build something lasting.
- Look to friends and coworkers about actions that have contributed to their success in the past so they can repeat such success in the future.

Extracurriculars

- Serve as a historian for a campus organization or club. Encourage using past successes as blueprints for future endeavors.
- Work with a campus historian and gain hands-on experience.
- Form a book or film club focused on biographies, historical fiction, and history.
